

Leave Indiana's No-Call List Alone! Life has been very pleasant, (since Indiana adopted the no-call list,) without the intrusions on our privacy by telemarketers. I would be willing to bet that the Federal Government is not bothered by telemarketers, and the vast majority of Indiana's population should not be either. Telemarketing is a cheap & sleezy way to promote private business, and the practice should not be allowed by the FCC. Perhaps a major class action lawsuit would put a damper on those business's who invade private residences with their annoying and troublesome calls. It's bad enough that these parasites are allowed to send their junk mail via the USPS. I would hope that my government would take a very close look at this issue and will refuse to allow all further unwanted solicitations by electronic media sources. I stand strongly behind the Indiana Attorney General's Office in refuting any effort to undermine Indiana's current No-Call list.
